HUMAN SURNAMES

The random name tables in Xanathar's Guide are a very useful addition, but if you were confused or frustrated to see that it includes hundreds of first names from a dozen distinct human cultures, but not even a single surname for any of them, then this document is for you!

Where possible I sourced real names from era-appropriate data, but many ancient cultures just didn't use anything we would equate with a surname. In those cases I either used modern surnames from the region, or included something approximate to a surname, so there is at least one additional table for each human culture listed in Xanathar's Guide to Everything.

While researching this document it became apparent that the "Polynesian" table needed to be expanded, to better represent the vast area and variety of peoples the region covers.

ARABIC

Arabic names are traditionally composed from five distinct elements; the ism, kunya, nasab, laqab, and nisba.

A name usually consists of an ism, and one or more of the other elements, any or all of which may be used to refer to a person, depending on the situation. For example:

Umm Ahmad	Nura al-Tawli	bint Jalal ibn Favez	al-Khayyam al-Isfahani
kunya	ism	laqab	nasab
the mother of Ahmad	Nura	the tall	the daughter of Jalal who was the son of Favez

ISM      the tentmaker of (the city) Isfahan

The ism is the name given at birth, usually an Arabic word whose meaning signals the hoped-for character of the person. eg: Nura; "light", Jalal; "greatness", Favez; "victory".

Roll on the Arabic name table in Xanathar's Guide.

KUNYA

The kunya is often the name of a person's first-born child, prefixed by Abu (father) or Umm (mother), eg: Umm Ahmad; "the mother of Ahmad", and is used as a sign of respect or reverence.

However it can also be a metaphorical or ironic byname, eg: Abu al-Favez; "the father of victory;" (the victorious), Umm al-Dawaniq; "the mother of pennies" (the miserly). Abu Bakr; "the father of the camel foal" (kind to camels).

When used as part of a person's full name, the kunya precedes the ism.

Either roll on the Arabic name table in Xanathar's Guide, or translate an English word into Arabic, and prefix the result with Abu or Umm, as appropriate.

NASAB

The nasab is a list of a persons male ancestors, usually just the father and grandfather, but it could be a long chain of names for someone in an important family.

They are all prefixed by ibn (son), except for women, who add the prefix bint (daughter) to just their fathers name, eg: bint Jalal ibn Favez; "the daughter of Jalal who was the son of Favez".

The nasab follows the ism.

Roll on the Arabic male name table in Xanathar's Guide as many times as the person's importance dictates, and prefix each name with ibn (or bint for a womans father).

LAQAB

The laqab is a byname, usually descriptive of some quality the person has (or would like to have), eg: al-Rashid; "the rightly-guided", al-Tawli; "the tall", al-Basil; "the brave".

These laqab follow the ism and precede the nasab.

There is also a religious form of laqab which is "Abd" (servant of) plus one of the 99 names of God, eg: Abd al-Rahman; "the servant of the Merciful". The feminine form of this laqab is "Amat", eg: Amat al-Rahman; "the (female) servant of the Merciful". These laqab are used in the place of an ism, eg: Abd al-Rahman ibn Idris ibn Sinan.

It wont be grammatically correct, but to make your own laqab bynames, it's probably easiest to just translate an English word into Arabic, then prefix it with "al-". eg; al-Rashid; "the rightly-guided", al-Tawli; "the tall", al-Basil; "the brave".

NISBA

The nisba can be derived from a persons place of birth, origin, residence, religious sect, tribe, family, or other affiliation. Also occasionally from a trade or profession.

A nisba is almost always preceded by the definite article, eg: al-Khabaz; "the baker", al-Tahiri; "of (the tribe) Tahir", al-Isfahani; "of (the city) Isfahan".

A person may have more than one nisba, in which case the order would be; profession, tribe or family, then location.

The nisba follows the ism and nasab.

Profession Nisba: Translate an English word into Arabic, then prefix it with "al-", eg: al-Khabaz; "the baker", al-Tajir; "the merchant", al-Bahar; "the sailor", etc.

Location Nisba: Prefix the names of cities and regions in your campaign setting with "al-" and add an "i" to the end, eg; al-Calimporti, al-Ormpuri, al-Shaari, al-Mirabari, etc.

Tribal Nisba: Choose or roll on the table below.

MESOAMERICAN

The ancient Nahuatl names were not gender-specific, though women often had more obviously feminine names, like Cuauhcihuatl; "Eagle Woman", Azcueitl; "White Heron Skirt", Amaxochitl; "Paper Flower".

Personal names usually consisted of two or more separate words, which sometimes form a complete sentence, but they did not have anything we would recognise as an inherited or family name.

DAY SIGN NAMES

Children are first given a name on the 7th day after they are born, according to the ritual calendar that combines a number from one to thirteen, and one of the twenty different day signs, for example; Mahtlactli-once Tecpatl, which means "Eleven Flint". The numeral is often dropped by the family in everyday use.

Each day, both the number and sign are incremented. After 13 days the cycle of numbers repeats, while the signs don't repeat until all 20 have been used. It takes 260 days for the full cycle to come back around to "1 Crocodile" again.

Within a few months children are taken to the temple and given one of the secondary names of the divine protector that oversaw the day of their birth. e.g. Cuauhtemoc; "Descending Eagle".

These names were not static though, and a change in social status would usually involve a partial or complete change of a person's name.

- Rolling 1-13 with standard RPG dice is, seemingly, a complex math problem with many long-winded solutions, so you might want to use an online dice roller, or just roll a d20 until it returns a number within the desired range.
- To create your own Mesoamerican names, you could use this English <> Nahuatl translator.

OTHER TYPES OF NAME

- Euphemistic names of people and deities, such as Ixcozauqui ("Yellow Face") - a term for the fire god.

- Titles incorporating the word tecuhtli (“Lord”) or tiachcauh (“Elder brother”), referring to high-ranking warriors, eg Chichimecatecuhtli (“Lord of the Chichimecs”) or Temillotl Tiachcauh (“Elder Brother Stone Column”).
- Names of plants, birds, insects, reptiles and animals like Xilaxochitl (“Calliandra Flower”), Tlohtli (“Hawk”), Ayotl (“Turtle”), Miztli (“Mountain Lion”), Azcatl (“Ant”).
- Names of precious/sacred objects, eg Macuextli (“Bracelet”), Xochicozcatl (“Flower Garland”).
- Names related to warfare and sacrifice, in particular those including the concept of atltlachinolli - “water-burnt land”, the cosmic war caused by the fusion of two natural elements, water and fire; Atletl (“Water-fire”), Cenyaotl (“One Enemy”), Malomitl (“Captive’s Bone”), etc.
- Names with the possessive particles e and hua meaning “owner of a thing” eg, Coyohua (“Coyote owner”).

FAMILY NAMES

Their origin and meaning are often forgotten, but quite a few ancient mesoamerican family names still survive.

DROW NAMES

Like their Elven cousins, drow prefer names that flow off the tongue, however their names tend to have a harsher sound to them. A drow name consists of a prefix (from Table 2) and one or more suffixes (from Table 3), and then a house name consisting of a prefix (from Table 4) and one or more suffixes (from Table 5). Definitions have been included in these tables to help determine what a name means once it has been generated. In the case of suffixes, male and female endings have been included where appropriate. Alternate spellings have also been provided in some cases.

If you don't like a particular combination, try some of the alternate suffixes listed, or add an "a," "e," "i," "l," "r," "s," "sh," or an apostrophe. Although not every combination of prefixes and suffixes will sound right, usually only a minor change is called for. If you can't make a particular name work, try one with a similar meaning. If you didn't like "G'eldriina," try a name that means "Spider-Sister" instead. If you have randomly generated a name and don't like its definition, try altering the order of the words. It is also possible to use the definition as just a starting place for the name's meaning. Often the definitions can be combined in a poetic way for better results. In the case of a three or more syllable name, try dropping one or more of the definitions.

TABLE 1*d10*Result

1-3	Roll once on Table 2 and once on Table 3
4-5	Roll once on Table 2 and twice on Table 3
6-7	Roll once on Table 2 and once on Table 3, add an apostrophe, then roll again on Table 3.
8-9	Roll once on Table 2 and once on Table 3 for a first name, then roll on Table 1 again for a second name.
10	Roll once on Table 3, add an apostrophe, then roll once on Table 2 and once on Table 3
